History I enjoy reading books about books and John Sutherland writes well about books of all kinds He has an entertaining and approachable style and makes his subject very readable Here he looks at the phenomenon of the bestseller The book is not an exhaustive list of bestsellers in the UK and in the US as it is a short introduction but it does look at the highlights as well as some unexpected bestsellers on both sides of the Atlantic. Ny times best sellers epub The book starts by defining a bestseller and then goes on to look at books which have made it to the top in the US and the UK Some of the time this is the same books but at other times the books which have caught the public imagination are completely different I found it interesting that a book has to sell copies now in the twenty first century to make the bestseller lists than in the late nineteenth century when the concept of the bestseller first appeared in the media. Book bestsellers uk I found this entertaining and informative reading and it reminded me of some of the books I read years ago I was quite surprised to realise that many of the early twentieth century bestsellers are still in print even now.

John Andrew Sutherland is an English lecturer emeritus professor newspaper columnist and author. Bestsellers books uk Now Emeritus Lord Northcliffe Professor of Modern English Literature at University College London John Sutherland began his academic career after graduating from the University of Leicester as an assistant lecturer in Edinburgh in 1964 He specialises in Victorian fiction 20th century literature and the history of publishing. Uk bestsellers list Apart from writing a regular column in the The Guardian newspaper Sutherland has published seventeen as of 2004 books and is editing the forthcoming Oxford Companion to Popular Fiction The series of books which starts with Was Heathcliff a Murderer has brought him a wide readership The books in the series are colle John Andrew Sutherland is an English lecturer emeritus professor newspaper columnist and author. Bestsellers uk Now Emeritus Lord Northcliffe Professor of Modern English Literature at University College London John Sutherland began his academic career after graduating from the University of Leicester as an assistant lecturer in Edinburgh in 1964 He specialises in Victorian fiction 20th century literature and the history of publishing. Best sellers nonfiction 2022 Apart from writing a regular column in the The Guardian newspaper Sutherland has published seventeen as of 2004 books and is editing the forthcoming Oxford Companion to Popular Fiction The series of books which starts with Was Heathcliff a Murderer has brought him a wide readership The books in the series are collections of essays Each essay takes a piece of classic fiction almost always from the Victorian period Carefully going over every word of the text Sutherland highlights apparent inconsistencies anachronisms and oversights and explains references which the modern reader is likely to overlook In some cases he demonstrates the likelihood that the author simply forgot a minor detail In others apparent slips on the part of the author are presented as evidence that something is going on beyond the surface of the book which is not explicitly described such as his explanation for why Sherlock Holmes should mis address Miss Stoner as Miss Roylott in The Adventure of the Speckled Band. Bestsellers 2024 In 2005 he was involved in Dot Mobile s project to translate summaries and quotes of classic literature into text messaging shorthand In the same year he was also Chair of Judges for the Booker Prize. Bestsellers paperback In June 2007 he published an autobiography The Boy Who Loved Books A Memoir On 18 December 2007 his annotated edition of Robert Louis Stevenson s The Black Arrow was released by Penguin Books site_link We didn t start the fire as Billy Joel sang Bestsellers is probably my favorite find of the year eminent professor John Sutherland gives us a pretty long summary of the history of bestsellerism from its cultural implications to specific authors movements ideas and most importantly how literature and history influenced each other in the last about two hundred years This is very important not only because you might learn something useful about how the publishing industry influences the works that you love or in some cases the one you probably never heard about but also because it highlights how much our collective minds are ultimately intertwined with the ink and paper that many people before us brought together and hopefully that many after us will

Nonfiction History Good informative Nonfiction History Good stuff and well done but this should have been called Bestsellers A Super Short History Of I was looking for an exegesis on the popularity of bestsellers and why a lot of them are crap I am a book snob and wanted to understand the urge to follow everybody else by reading the present It novel But no it was not to be While disappointed it was still fun learning the different kinds of English language bestsellers on both sides of the Atlantic and a very little bit of why they were so maybe Nonfiction History This was an interesting albeit very brief overview of the phenomenon of the bestseller I think it started well but the two sections on the US and UK market lost their way a little for me I would have been interested to learn about what made them bestsellers something tantalisingly touched on in the beginning rather than the lists of bestsellers which the sections became Also the final section about the digital revolution was skimmed over with almost no detail Nevertheless it was an interesting enough read Nonfiction History Not at all what I expected this terse and dull little book had no lists no wonderful pile of book titles for me to peruse and likely add to my TBRs the main reason I picked it up Yes there were tons of books mentioned in the text but while it attempted to be chatty the presentation to me only succeeded in being boring The author writes well but extremely pedantically and this wasn't my cuppa A handy little book to read while you're waiting in a long line perhaps but I've got lots of other far interesting books to read thank you very much Nonfiction History

Well this Very Short Introduction is nice tour though bestsellers in the US and UK I do wonder what Sutherland would change considered the rise of certain authors and books Still a quick fun read At times Sutherland can be quite snarky Nonfiction History Here's a fast little gallop through the crazy world of bestsellers I liked it Some fun facts for you Agatha Christie is probably the world's biggest selling novelist ever 72 novels in total 2 billion sales That is not really a fun fact It's actually a yawn I think most people are born knowing this already Barbara Cartland is a best-selling author although none of her 600 PLUS NOVELS it says here was an individual bestseller Gone With the Wind sold a million in 1936 first year of publication which was phenomenal but the top five novels regularly sell that amount in their first year in recent years in America Genre novelists maybe predictably were able to crank out the merchandise at speeds which indicate some form of chemical assistance check it out Zane Grey 200 westerns Max Brand king of the pulps 600 novels plus 900 stories under 20 pen names in various different genres most famous title Destry Rides Again but he also created Dr Kildare Louis L Amour 200 western novels John Creasey 600 mystery novels Hank Jansen about 220 novels with titles like Frails Can Be So Tough and Broads Don't Scare Easy Leslie Charteris umpteen novels he created The Saint Dennis Wheatley also umpteen Erle Stanley Gardner 80 plus mystery novels Mickey Spillane not that many novels but he did brag that he could turn out one in three days if he was pushed Stephen King 54 novels and going strong There's a constant strand of what you might call research fiction in the bestsellers The Agony and the Ecstasy which was the life of

Michaelangelo fictionalized by Irving Stone Hawaii which is the fictionalized story of Hawaii by James Michener Hotel Airport Wheels The Moneychangers all by Arthur Hailey in which he investigates one industry per novel then there s John Grisham and Michael Crichton Some of em contract out the research. Glow recipe bestsellers kit There s an assumption that bestsellers are the fast food of fiction to be scraped off the shoes of any readers of proper literature before entering a decent household but sometimes great novels actually sell well such as Gentlemen Prefer Blondes Main Street The Grapes of Wrath All the King s Men Lolita The Naked and the Dead Lady Chatterley s Lover guess why Couples Portnoy s Complaint Humboldt s Gift Ragtime Sophie s Choice The Handmaid s Tale The Satanic Verses The Bonfire of the Vanities Some big name authors as you have noticed turn themselves into franchises and brands new James Bond novels are produced without the need for the frankly deceased Ian Fleming likewise V C Andrews novels continued to be published as A V C Andrews novel by Andrew Neiderman If only they d have thought to do that with Charles Dickens or Shakespeare Unwittingly I seem to have become a John Sutherland fanboy I have now read this one plus his very amusing Lives of the Novelists plus his also amusing 50 Literature Ideas you Really Need to Know plus his strange annoying but never boring How to be Well Read Perhaps he is stalking me Nonfiction a hundred years later thanks to the e book revolution. Glow recipe bestsellers kit The Kindle edition
